Principles & Practices

of Special Education

(Formerly called - Learning Disabilities)

Have you ever longed for another way to teach those students who would not stop talking or look at you with a blank stare or can read all the words but can't answer the questions?

Learning Disabilities is a course which will cover the various theoretical foundations of learning disabilities and their characteristics. Teachers will examine the historical perspectives to understand how the laws throughout the years have changed to accommodate students who have been classified with learning disabilities. Teachers will receive a variety of materials, learn new strategies, and try new activities to develop innovative methods for creating lessons to assist students with learning disabilities.

A student panel will provide teachers with a primary reference source to answer the hard to ask questions regarding success in life and in school.
